10 Day-Trip Restaurants Worth a Drive From Atlanta

By Christopher Hassiotis | November 12, 2015

With the overabundance of quality dining in Atlanta and even its immediate suburbs, it can be tough to turn one's attention outwards. But hop in a car for an hour or two and you'll still find exciting restaurants farther afield. All traffic complications aside these exceptional spots are all within a reasonable round-trip distance, and could make for a great visit either on a weeknight or weekend.

Serenbe in Palmetto

Southwest of Atlanta near Chattahoochee Hills you'll find Serenbe, a community planned around sustainable practices, seasonal produce and living more organically. Don't mistake this all for some nouveau-hippie thing, though; Serenbe's a Southern Living dream made real, with an on-site bakery called Blue Eyed Daisy, and farm-fresh restaurants The Hil (pictured) and The Farmhouse serving daily changing options.

Must Order: Pan-roasted chicken with smashed potatoes and mushrooms at The Hil
